Read the passage carefully and answer the questions 21-25 given below:

In olden times, man's worst enemy was nature. He lived under the continual threat of famine, pestilence, storms on the earth and in the sea. A summer could bring death to a large population and winters were menace. Mountains were like a barrier between people of different countries, a sea was less a highway than an impassable division. If we go back to the pages of history, we find ample proof that man, in the distant past, did not worship God, but either the sun or the winds or the sea. Fear urged him to worship these natural forces.

Today the scenario has changed a lot. Though nature, still an enemy, is an enemy that is always unpredicted and unpredictable, yet can be conquered to a certain extent. Modern agriculture assures us ample food supply. Modern transportation has reduced the distances between countries. Modern medicine and sanitation allow dense populations to cover the ground without risk of pestilence. True is the fact that certain severe natural disasters cannot be avoided even now. Against earthquake, flood and hurricane man has, as yet, devised no adequate protection. The Tsunami tragedy has once again given man shudders. The tragedy has become a nightmare for humanity. Now the scientists' boastings seem to be cruel jokes. The tragedy has rendered man helpless and hapless with no protection from anywhere to heal his wounds. We are forced to ask the question, "Are we safe on this planet?"
